EMBASSY BEAT

LONDON (DAVE ANDERSON): I got in too late to really affect the game about that, Chief.

ROME (RON FISHER): Well, first congratulations to my former ally: Wormtoung Wilson er...whoops I mean Kevin, Kevin Wilson, on a well played and most deserved convincing win. I have no hard feeling and if I'd been in the same position I'd probably have done the same thing. I'm pretty happy-my best finish in a Boris game yet and gives me hope for the future. Anyway it was a lot of fun and thanks to all my worthy opponents and to Paul for the usually terrific GMing job.

FRENCH THWART INURSION! ARE THWARTED IN RETURN!

MIRKWOOD: The Great Powers are jockeying for position while they mobilize their reserves. The French seem to have riled up both the Italians and the Germans, so should woo England assiduously. Russia scored negative points with Austria and England but will get SWE so presumably has cut a deal with Kaiser Seth and perhaps Sultan Ali Rich who is preparing to drive a naval stake into the Italian underbelly.

EMBASSY BEAT

Constantinople: The Grand Visier waited patiently outside the Sultan's chambers, oblivious to the screams of ecstasy that could be heard from within. The Sultan was having another one of his infamous debauches and the Grand Visier was furious. Furious that he hadn't been given the marching orders for the Imperial Army and Navy. Furious that he did not know who the Sultan had decided to attack. Furious that he had not been invited to participate...

The guard finally came out and beckoned to the Visier. "The Sultan will see you now." "Finally," thought the Visier. "It took the old fart long enough to finish...how long can it take with two dozen nubile harem mistresses?" The Visier entered the Sultan's chambers...always impressed with the offensive display of wealth and power inside, he approached the dais. His Imperial Majesty was face down on the cushions surrounded by at least a dozen women giving him a massage...He was drunk...again.

"Ah, my friend," he exclaimed. "I'm glad I'm finally here. You're here." He began to slur his words together. "We're all here!!! At that, the women decided to start tickling the Sultan until he was rolling around in relative hysterics. It was painful for the Visier to see the Sultan reduced to such a state. He was insanely jealous.

"Your Majesty, Your commanders wish to know their orders. Who are we to attack? Russia or Austria?" the Visier queried.

"Oh, that. I knew I forgot something. Wench, bring me a coin!" he cried.

Quickly, one of the scantily clad masseuses brought him an old copper coin of virtually no value. He tossed it high in the air and it clanged loudly to the floor. It spun for a few seconds and then came to rest. "Talis!" the Sultan cried.

"Talis, Your Majesty? What does that mean?" said the Visier. "I've no idea. Tell the Generals...they'll know..." And with that, the Sultan returned his attentions to the ladies under his command.

The Visier bowed and left the Royal Chambers, just as confused and as frustrated as when he had entered. "Talis," he muttered and went off to see the army commanders...

Paris-All: The French Government would like to declare to the world that England and Germany are antisocial poopyheads.

MINAS MORGUL: Perfidious Albion was forceably expelled from two foreign capitals, so a shaky standoff persists in the West. In the East, resurgent Islam continues to roll. Only divine intervention can explain Italy's continued survival. For the Austrian, will 1907 be a good year to die?

PRESS:

The crowd outside the capsule stood in hushed silence as the capsule floated gently to earth. It landed with a slight "thump" on the edge of the castle gardens, crushing a bed of carnations. The hatch door clamps popped off with a soft "Shoosh" and then the door itself swung open. The crowd gasped as a head popped through the opening. The ample figure of Mrs Gasperdi emerged from the capsule and walked over to Duchess Gloriana, and knelt down on one knee.

"Forgive me for disobeying your orders, Your Highness, but Gildio would have wanted this way", said Mrs. Gasperdi. "When the plumbing doesn't work you don't build an outhouse, he always said."

The game report was not available at press time. It should get here Saturday, but rather than delay the issue a week (and throw Ms Nar's May travel schedule haywire), we'll proceed for now without it. E-mailers will get it forwarded to them; the snail mailers will have the mailing of this issue delayed until Monday with the results as an insert.
